VI. Read the passage, then decide if the statements that follow it are True or False

Many parents may feel that social networking sites are a waste of their children's time. However, new research claims that the communication opportunities provided by social networking encourage young people to explore their interests, develop technical skills, and work on new forms of self- expression. The three-year study carried out by a University of California research team that interviewed over 800 teens and conducted over 2000 hours of online observations. It found that social networking helps teenagers learn the social and technical skills they need to be knowledgeable citizens in the digital age.

The study concludes that social networking contributes to young people's extended friendships and interests. While the majority of teens use social networking sites to "hang out" with people they already know in real life, some use them to find like- minded people. Those interested in chess or international politics, for example, can expand their circle with others who share the same interests and can find information that goes beyond that they have access to at school. They can also publicize and distribute their music, art work, or writing to online audiences, and gain visibility and enhance their reputations. The researchers said teens usually respect one another's authority online, and they are often more motivated to learn one another than from their parents or other adults.

23. Teens spend an average of 2000 hours online annually. _____
24. Most teenagers are said to use social networking sites for interacting with existing friends. _____
